

CABINET CARE

There is a little secret we need you to hear, and it's about kitchen cabinets. Whether they are unfinished, stained, painted, or even SPRAY-TANNED (no we haven't seen that yet), they will take a beating over time. They are functional pieces of your house, not roped-off museum exhibits, right?! So, naturally, a fingernail, a wedding ring, or a sharp utensil can damage a surface.

But take heart – the feedback we have received from the Milesi products we use is outstanding. Some of our own team members have it in their own homes, and we have seen work that has stood the test of time in CUSTOMERS' homes as well. The Milesi cures much faster than a typical paint, but you should note that it will still cure over a few days. This means it adheres to the substrate and hardens to the touch as it cures.

Q: Can I touch them up?

A: Yes, just take a small brush, like a craft brush, and cover the affected area with the product we will leave you.

Q: How do I clean them?

A: We recommend that you regularly dust cabinets with a soft damp cloth (a microfiber rag is great) and dry them with a soft towel. Do not use polishes, oils, or wax.

The key is to wipe up spills when they occur. Give special attention to grease in the cooking zone. A damp microfiber cloth may do the job. If not, choose a cleaning solution that will cut grease without damaging the finish (we recommend Dawn as your main additive).

Do not use an abrasive sponge, cleaners with abrasive particles, harsh detergents, ammonia, or oil soap. Avoid using Magic Erasers on your new cabinets.
